Chicago Journals partners with American Historical Association to publish
*American Historical Review

The University of Chicago Press and the American Historical Association (AHA) are pleased to announce a new cooperative agreement to publish the American Historical Review. Since its inception in 1895, the American Historical Review has been the journal of record for the historical profession, maintaining and expanding its original breadth of coverage to include all fields of history.

“Fostering and disseminating scholarship in all fields of history has been the highest priority of the American Historical Association since its founding in 1884,” said Arnita A. Jones, Executive Director of the AHA. “We now look forward to enhancing this tradition by joining with the University of Chicago Press, whose long commitment to excellence in scholarship parallels our own.”

The AHA was chartered by an act of Congress in 1889 to oversee and protect the historiographical legacy of the United States. The American Historical Review has been self-published for the last thirty-eight years and is the only journal to bring together scholarship from every major field of historical study, featuring scholarly articles that have an appeal beyond a particular specialty and reviews of books and films determined to be of greatest relevance to professional historians.

“In selecting a Press to represent the American Historical Review we sought an institution with an impeccable scholarly reputation and a deep commitment to scholarly journals. The University of Chicago Press is outstanding on both counts. Indeed, in this age of increasing commercialization even in academic publishing, Chicago’s list of books and journals continues to impress the community of scholars with the seriousness of its titles,” wrote Robert A. Schneider (Indiana University), Editor of the American Historical Review. “The editors and staff of the AHR are looking forward to a long and fruitful relationship with the University of Chicago Press, a relationship that will be a credit to both institutions.”

“We are very pleased and honored to be selected to publish the American Historical Review. The partnership between the AHA and Chicago Journals reflects a shared dedication to providing lasting scholarship that is accessible and discoverable, both today and for generations to come,” said Nawin Gupta, Journals Division Manager, University of Chicago Press.

About the American Historical Association: The American Historical Association (AHA) is a nonprofit membership organization founded in 1884 and incorporated by Congress in 1889 for the promotion of historical studies, the collection and preservation of historical documents and artifacts, and the dissemination of historical research. As the largest historical society in the United States, the AHA provides leadership and advocacy for the profession, fights to ensure academic freedom, monitors professional standards, spearheads essential research in the field, and provides resources and services to help its members succeed. The AHA serves more than 14,000 history professionals, representing every historical period and geographical area.

About the University of Chicago Press: Founded in 1891, the University of Chicago Press is the largest American university press. The Journals Division publishes periodicals and serials in a wide range of disciplines, including several journals that were the first scholarly publications in their respective fields. Online since 1995, the Journals Division has also been a pioneer in electronic publishing, delivering original, peer-reviewed research from international scholars to a worldwide audience.
