Present Research: Land's End: The Fate of Our Coasts

I continue to research historical cultural geography. Now that my book on islands is in print, I am turning my attention to coasts and how their function and meaning have changed over time. Now that populations all over the world are pressing up against the sea, coasts have become one of our most vulnerable and contested geographies. I continue to be interested in the Atlantic world, especially European coastal regions, but, now that I am resident in Berkeley, my attention is turning to the Pacific.
