McGill-Queen’s French Atlantic Worlds

Series Editors: Nicholas Dew and Jean-Pierre Le Glaunec

The French Atlantic world has emerged as a rich and dynamic field of historical research. This series will showcase a new generation of scholarship exploring the worlds of the French Atlantic - including West Africa, the greater Caribbean region, and the continental Americas - from the sixteenth century to the mid-nineteenth century. Books in the series will explore how the societies of the French Atlantic were shaped and connected by trans-oceanic networks of colonialism, how local and indigenous cultures and environments shaped colonial projects, and how the diverse peoples of the French Atlantic understood and experienced their worlds. Especially welcome are histories from the perspectives of the enslaved and dispossessed. Comparative studies are encouraged and the series will accept manuscript submissions in English and in French. Original works of scholarship are preferred, though translations of landmark books in the field will be considered.

McGill-Queen’s welcomes inquiries from authors. If you have a project that you think might fit into one of our series, we invite you to contact the Press.
